HIDES IN A TRUNK, BUT NEARLY DIES

Irving Green Eludes Police in Home; Unconscious When Found; Recovering.

The ardor of Irving Green, colored, in escaping arrest when police of the Fourth precinct got too hot upon his trail, nearly caused his death today. Green was suspected of the robbery of Albert V. Timmons, of 1121 Four-and-a-half street southwest. Lieutenant Flather and three men from the Fourth precinct, trailed him to his home at 491 J street southwest. One man was stationed in the front of the house and another in the rear, and Lieutenant Flather and the third man entered. They searched the premises without avail, looking in closets and under beds. They were sure he had entered the house, and Lieutenant Flather resorted to questioning Green's mother. The policemen were about to leave, when the aged woman overdid her part. She maintained stoutly that Irving had gone, and took Lieutenant Flather to the window to point the way he had gone. Her close description of the fugitive's exit caused suspicion and he kept asking Mrs. Green with questions without avail. Finally, the lieutenant, exasperated, sank down upon a trunk, and was smitten with an idea. He moved the trunk. It did not move easily. He shifted it and finally lifted it. It was much heavier than trunks usually are. He tried to open it, but it was locked. Mrs. Green, it developed, had the key, and she refused to part with it. Arguments were of no avail, so the lieutenant told his men to take the trunk to the station and he would see what was inside. When they started out with it, Mrs. Green surrendered, and unlocked the trunk. Irving was on the inside, but nearly suffocated. A hurried run to the hospital was necessary to save his life. The pulmonologist at Emergency brought him back to consciousness, and he will be locked up.

Campanini Will Conduct in Baltimore

The performance of Verdi's "Rigoletto," which, with Titta Ruffo in the part, will open the Chicago Grand opera company's season at the Lyric, Baltimore, next Friday night, will be conducted by Cleofante Campanini. Maestro Campanini succeeds Andrea Dippel as impresario of the company, and the "Rigoletto" performance will be the first he has conducted since assuming his new duties. The "Rigoletto" performance promises to be one of the most remarkable that has ever been given in this city, and it is thought that it will be the occasion for as great a display of enthusiasm as has marked Ruffo's appearance in New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago. Alice Zepilli, one of the younger sopranos of the company, who has proved her ability in this city a number of times, will be in the Gilda. The Duke will be sung by the Italian tenor Aristodemio Giordani, who was favorably received at the Lyric last winter when he was heard at the performance of "L'uccello di Lamermer," in which Tetrassini sang.

Aged Women's Homes Tag Day Beneficial

Although no report has been made to Mrs. John Owens, acting president of the home associations, by her lieutenants, it is believed that nearly $600 was collected for the Aged Women's Home, in Wisconsin avenue, by "tag day" collections in Georgetown. The first collection in Georgetown was made last year, but Mrs. Owens believes the amount will exceed that figure. The Boy Scouts of the city helped in the work.

CHURCHES DEVOTE ADAY TO LUTHER

Celebrate Anniversary of His Nailing Thesis on Door of Wittenberg Church.

Capital churches of half a dozen denominations are uniting today in commemorating the three hundred and ninety-sixth anniversary of the day on which Martin Luther nailed his ninety-five theses to the door of his church in Wittenberg, Saxony. This action is largely in response to a letter sent to all the pastors of the District by the Lutheran Ministerial Association, asking them to make some reference to Luther's work in their sermons today. "Martin Luther—World-wide Benefactor," was the subject of a sermon by the Rev. John Compton Bell at the Metropolitan Baptist Church, at the Central Presbyterian Chapel the Rev. Dr. W. H. Bates preached on "Martin Luther, His Work and Its Results." The Pastor Begins Twenty-fifth Year. The Rev. Dr. Wallace Radcliffe, pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, will take "Luther's Hammer" for his subject this evening, and "Martin Luther and the Reformation" will be the theme of the Rev. H. H. Thompson at the Washington Methodist Episcopal Church this evening. In practically all of the nineteen Lutheran churches in the District, including the German and Scandinavian churches, the anniversary was either observed this morning or announced for the evening. The story of the life of Martin Luther will be reviewed by the Rev. C. H. Butler at the Columbia Heights Lutheran Church this evening, and illustrated with stereopticon slides. At St. Mark's Lutheran Church the Festival of the Reformation was observed, a sermon on the reformer by the Rev. William A. Wade, pastor, being a feature. A love feast at the Temple Baptist Church this morning marked the beginning of the twenty-fifth year of the Rev. Dr. J. J. Muir as pastor there. The pulpit was flanked with flowers and potted plants and the congregation filled the church. The Rev. Dr. Muir's morning subject was "Baptist Catholicism," and this evening he will preach on "Adam Shifting Responsibility."

Popular Excuses, Course Theme.
The Rev. Dr. C. Everett Granger, of the Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, this evening begins a series of sermons on "Popular Excuses," the first of which will deal with the man whose answer to Christianity is, "I am good enough already." Every Sunday evening he will take up a similar stereotyped answer, and the whole series will comprise a thorough course in evangelism. Four meetings at the Second Baptist Church today mark the beginning of a two weeks' service there, in charge of the pastor, the Rev. H. H. Howitt. The meetings will close every night.

WOMEN INVENTORS SHOW VERSATILITY

Patent Office Records Give Proof of Inventive Genius Close to Man's.

Ever since Darius Green brought his flying machine to such a lamentable end, and possibly a few centuries before, there has been just a cornered hen's field of inventive genius. Even if the motor wouldn't move or the non-reliable bottles wouldn't non-rell, he has kept persistently at his wheels and levers with little thought of the invasion of petticoats into his domain.

Woman's trusty hairpin has served her for so many years as a combination lock-opener, shoe-buttoner, cork-screw, pot-scraper, and goodness knows what else that it is a wonder some enterprising manufacturer hasn't placed it on the market as the prize of the inventor. "Women have achieved in literature," concedes Mr. Inventor Man, scarcely asking him to give his blue prints and their intricate tracings long enough to recognize the new species of Miss Inventress. "But the encyclopedia fails to record the names of women composers or inventors," he says further, "and the best of history has shown that women have failed to produce any notable works of genius. Haven't all the important discoveries, the professions, which are practically monopolized by women, been made by men? What about the famous chefs, modistes and dressmakers?"

Lillian Russell's "Dresser Trunk."
Whereupon Mr. Inventor Man curled up into his tortoise shell rimmed glasses as if the question were eternally settled. But the Patent Office records tell a different story. There are even names of famous women tucked away securely in the big filing cabinets. "Ever hear of Lillian Russell?" The airy, fairy actress has demonstrated her capacity for serious thought in devising what she calls a "dresser trunk." When folded down to the least common multiple it looks like an ordinary theatrical trunk. But when open and operating in all departments it is a convenient dressing table. Lillian didn't record the fact in the plans and specifications submitted to Uncle Sam that her dresser trunk was the result of her early experiences in the kerosene belt "opry houses," but that is probably the truth.

Another actress, Bertha Gailand, "viewed with alarm" her lingerie night dresses coming back from the laundry in as many shreds as an Italian dinner. So she invented a detachable lace collar which makes a personally conducted tour to her own lavatory, while its other end goes to the no-checker no-washie. "Women have no mechanical minds," Well, here is Harriet Ruth Tracy, who has a whole cabinet full of patent papers all to herself. And it is all about sewing machines. Attachments of various sorts, devices that are an integral part of the machine so that attachments are unnecessary, constitute her inventions. Elizabeth W. Smith, of Atlanta, Ga., probably got tired of rocking the baby's cradle by hand, despite the flattering tradition attached to that time-honored occupation. So she invented a sort of motor attachment which operates with the foot. Adele Nadeau, of Massachusetts, invented a contrivance which is a combination chair and cradle, both of which rock at the same time.

Wearing Apparel Favorite Field.
Invalid chairs, pillow supports, and trays are also credited to women inventors.

More patents are granted to women in the division of wearing apparel perhaps than any other, according to Dr. J. J. Darby, one of the veteran examiners in the Patent Office. "Of course styles change," he says, "and that renders some of the numerous dress aids useless. But many of them are really clever contrivances, and of much value, I suspect, to women."

"We seldom see the inventors themselves here," he says, "but their attorneys in most cases. No models are submitted to us. We examine the applications, which contain drawings and descriptions."

Probably the oldest woman inventor known to the Patent Office is Mrs. Leona J. Critchfield, who has been taken out several patents on undergarments. A New England woman, Jean Appleton, has made a fortune out of a rubber union garment, which has been found to add materially in the reduction of flesh.

Even if the men have claimed all the inventive honors, even in woman's own domain, here is one woman who returns the compliment. The perversity of mankind's collar buttons, to say nothing of the difficulty of fastening a high-collared shirt, has appealed to her sense of humor. At any rate, Mrs. Sarah Rose of New York has invented a linen collar button-hole which one finds in the dark.

The square paper bag, probably the commonest article in the household, was invented in 1871 by an Englishwoman, Miss Margaret Knight, who is now in her seventeenth year, and is still busy with her device.

For the bag invention she was given a decoration by Queen Victoria. She is now at work on her eighty-ninth invention, a device for fastening a covered shuttle, now in universal use in cotton mills. She accomplished this at the age of twelve.

Two Women Patent Examiners.
Of the forty-three employees in the examining divisions of the Patent Office, two of the assistants are women, Miss Marie K. Saunders and Miss Alice M. Burton, both of whom are experts in their branch of the Government service.

Miss Purinton, who is a recent appointee, outdistances the class of her applicants in the rigid examination which employees in this department must undergo. "We have been accustomed so long to the idea that women can do only the things which are set before them that it has been an accepted fact that they can do nothing which requires original thought," said Miss Saunders.

"One often hears the charge that women cannot improve upon the tools she uses most each day; that some man has to do her thinking for her, and show her how to save her own labor. But I believe that that idea is changing, along with a lot of other old-fashioned notions that belong to the past."

At the moment she was examining the merits and demerits of a range boiler NOT invented by woman. It looked very complicated.

"We have 80 different divisions here, representing almost everything in the heavens above, the earth beneath, and the waters under the earth. And you'll find a goodly proportion of woman's names among them too."

EDITH LOBERT.

Armor-Clad Auto Car To Defy Highwaymen

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—In order to minimize the possibility of robbery the Bethlehem Steel Company has had built by M. J. Kneup & Sons, of Newark, an armor clad automobile car for the paymaster. The car will be put in service next week.

In outward appearance the armored car is not unlike the wagonette used by undertakers. The body is constructed of sheet steel, affording protection for two armed guards who sit inside with the paymaster. Above the steel is heavy glass, through which those within can see any movement on the outside.
